X Common Errors Checklist for Compare and Contrast Essays

Instructions: Before submitting your essay, answer "Yes" or "No" to each of the following questions. For every "No," stop and revise.

Thesis & Focus

- The "Announcement" Thesis: Does your thesis argue something meaningful, or does it just say "This essay will compare and contrast X and Y"? (It must argue!).
- One-Sided Analysis: Does your essay discuss both similarities AND differences? (Unless the assignment specifies only one).
- Straying Off-Topic: Does every paragraph directly relate to and support your central thesis?

Organization & Structure

- The "Tennis Match" Effect (Point-by-Point): In a point-by-point essay, do you bounce back and forth between Subject A and Subject B for each point without confusing the reader?
- The "Apples and Oranges" Effect (Block Method): In a block-method essay, when you discuss Subject B, do you address the same points and in the same order as you did for Subject A?
- Unbalanced Analysis: Is one subject discussed in significantly more detail than the other? Check your paragraph lengths.

Analysis & Content

- The "So What?" Factor: For every similarity or difference you note, have you explained why it is significant? Have you moved beyond description to analysis?
- The "Listing" Trap: Does your essay read like a list of points, or does it flow as a coherent argument? (Ensure you are connecting your ideas, not just listing them).
- Obvious Comparisons: Have you avoided stating similarities or differences that are too superficial or self-evident? (e.g., "Both are books," "One is old, one is new").

Language & Clarity

- Faulty Parallelism: When discussing the same point for both subjects, is your sentence structure parallel?
  - o Incorrect: "Subject A is efficient, while the cost of Subject B is low."
  - Correct: "Subject A is efficient, while Subject B is inexpensive."

- Missing Transitions: Do you use transition words (like "however," "similarly," "conversely") to signal when you are switching between subjects or moving to a new point?
- Inconsistent Terminology: Do you refer to your subjects by the same names/terms throughout the essay? (e.g., don't switch between "Macbeth" and "the Scottish king" randomly).

Evidence & Support

- Unsupported Claims: Is every claim backed up with a specific example, quote, statistic, or piece of evidence?
- Weak Evidence: Is your evidence relevant and strong, or is it vague and general?
